The effect of the current in the armature of a rotary converter may be determined by considering the machine, first, acting as a simple 3-phase machine, and secondly, as a continuous-current dynamo. Superimposing the conditions obtaining in the first condition on those obtaining in the second, it will be found that the resultant current in all the conductors of the rotary converter is less than is the case either with a 3-phase machine or a dynamo; consequently the heating of such a machine when operated as a rotary converter is less than when operated either as a 3-phase machine or dynamo. The reactions of the magnetism due to the current in the armature add together...
