Excerpt: .time for my birdlings to go to their nests, said Violet, rising and taking lled s hand. Bid good-night to papa and the rest and we will go. CHAPTER XIII WoULn you enjoy a little stroll about the grounds before seeking your nest for the night, dearest? asked Harold of Grace, speaking so softly that the words reached no ear but hers. I think I should--with pleasant company, she added, a twinkle of fun in her eyes as she lifted them to his, so full of love and admiration. He who gives the invitation will do his best to be that, he returned, offering his arm as they both rose to their feet. A few minutes later they were seated in the arbor on the edge of the cliff overlooking the river--the very place where he had first told the story of his love...
