It was my sincere desire, that the curtain of oblivion might be forever drawn over the transaction between the defendants and myself; and no exertion of mine has been wanting, to prevent the publication of the court proceedings; conceiving myself bound in that event, to publish to the world a narration of circumstances, which were not exhibited to the court, in justification of my conduct, as one of the assignees of John Field and John Field Son, and for the information of their creditors. But, as this desirable end was not effected, it becomes an indispensable duty to myself and my fellow citizens, that the proceedings which originated the prosecution, as well as the prosecution itself, should be exhibited to the publick, that the merits of a cause which has excited much interest amongst the citizens of Philadelphia, might no longer remain in obscurity. The method which presents as most eligible for this purpose, is, by exhibiting at once, a narration of the circumstances, which...
