Pegasus/BOMC. 1 Cloth(s), 2015. hard. Book Condition: New. The author of the Somerset Maugham Awardwinning novel A Season in Abyssinia and the nonfiction Aventis Prize finalist Mendeleyev's Dream here recasts the culture wars and political struggles of late 15th-century Florence as a signal moment in modern history. Lorenzo de' Medici and his family embodied the progressive humanist spirit of the Renaissance, patronizing great artists while guiding vulnerable Florence through Italy's ever-shifting political alliances. The monk Savonarola, however, inspired a disenfranchised public with Old Testament prophecies of doom, hoping to establish a new, democratic "City of God." Paul Strathern's superbly written account explores the complex dynamics of their battle for Florence."This is more than a dual biography. It's a social and religious history, showing the tension that still holds between secularism and religion. A riveting narrative history."Booklist (starred review)"What stands out as much as anything here is the spark and quality of Strathern's writing. In a single sentence, Strathern captures the broad currents of civic history, the magnetic presence of a remarkable individual, and the specificity of a liturgical and biographical occasion. An engrossing narrative of power, corruption and civic life, a vivid portrait of a city in crisis and the spiritual leader who embodied its aspirations and flaws."Washington Post"Fans of television shows such as The Borgias and The Tudors, or even Game of Thrones, will find no end of entertainment in this in-depth chronicle of the real-life events of the Medici family in Renaissance Florence. Lovers of medieval history will be pulled into this informative and gripping account; academics will find it a credible source of historical knowledge. Strathern's approachable, objective style turns a litany of information into a spellbinding saga worthy of prime time. A thrilling and informative chronicle of one of the Renaissance's most notorious dynasties."Library Journal (starred...
